ABOUT THE AUTHOR

Josephine Walker, a former stay-at-home mom, car sales associate, Realtor and CNA in a long-term care center started her writing career in 2009 after asking God “When I get old, what am I going to be doing? I must have some talent somewhere.” God planted a seed in her heart, gave her the idea for her first book, a fiction called Hope, yet to be published. Over the two years of writing Hope, she learned her craft, which prepared for God connecting her with Mr. Muntean to author, Willing to Die.

ENDORSEMENTS

John's ambitious novel is an amalgam of hope, an evocative sense of place, and subtle insights into the corrupt minds of both individuals and institutions of his native Romania.

It is, in fact, a truly fresh, totally compelling journey of a little boy "Nelu" who thrown into the ring of life, instead of running, he stood and fought, like a modern Crusader.

From the first scene to the breathless final, the tension builds. Nelu's narrative is lucid and swift; his knowledge of the world its people, customs, history, politics is startling; his delineation of character is sharp; and his subject is a topical of tomorrow's headlines.

The novel is tough-minded, spellbinding, a novel to open with anticipation and to close with cheers.

The author also depicts the moral and spiritual struggles of his characters with a vivacious intensity and intelligence that give the novel its essential freshness and intensity. A monumental achievement.

When a person like John Muntean is willing to tell his story openly and transparently it is always a great opportunity to listen, observe, and learn lessons for our own journey. I encourage you to do just that through this book.

The story of this Romanian family is both engaging and intriguing! They have first-hand knowledge and experience of the evils from dictatorial Socialism and Communism. This is where America is now headed if we do not curb the onslaught of this vicious political philosophy that has crushed the lives and hopes of millions of God's children for so many decades. History is about to repeat itself as America bows to socialist ideologies and agendas under the guise of "Progressiveness." This nation must wake up and learn from those who know about and have experienced the dark side of this evil ideology. America is still the last bastion of hope for freedom, true prosperity and must continue to be the fortress for religious liberties from which our country sprang.

I first met the Muntean family in the late 1980's when ministering for Pastor Floyd Lawhon in Orange Country, California. During the four week revival I became acquainted with this family from Romania, and their astonishing story of living under a Communist dictator and their amazing immigration to the United States. This book is a very intriguing true story that narrates a journey of destiny, proving the faithfulness of God during the most adverse circumstances. As an added note, when Jentezen Franklin and myself traveled to Romania to conduct a city-wide evangelistic meeting, the son of John, served as our interpreter through the trip, where hundreds under former communist chains, received Christ and were won to the Kingdom of God.

When I first heard about John and Stela Muntean was in the mid-seventies. Radio Free Europe and The Voice Of America were broadcasting the action John Muntean of Sighisoara, Romania, was taking to secure his freedom. A teenager at those times, I was deeply impressed about the courage of such a man of God. It impressed me to the point of doing something similar or even more dramatic, if the work of God under Communism was to prosper in the Romania of those times. This was amplified by the truth that my own father and mother, respectively, Victor and Maria Gog were condemned and imprisoned by the communist authorities of Romania.

Mrs. Walker did a thorough and detailed job by taking her time to listen and pen the events of real people like the Munteans, and to put them in a written form for the generation to come after our times. Those reading this book are encouraged not to spend their Christian faith in self-complacency, neither in superficiality. Our walk with God is a real walk that involves action, a daily encounter with our Lord and Savior and making a living history with Him every day. This is the way Mrs. Walker managed to retell the story of John and Stela Muntean, whom I'm privileged to pastor and to call my loyal friends.
